

A great opportunity to develop your person-centred clinical medication review skills!

Are you looking to develop your skills so that you can perform face-to-face medication reviews with confidence?

Do you know how to structure your reviews to ensure these are effective and person-centred?

Thinking about how we use our clinical skills to enhance the care we provide through medication reviews is a valuable skill.

CPP is running its Clinical Medication Review workshop at the Village Hotel, Hull, HU4 7DY on Thursday 5th July. This full-day interactive workshop will help you build your confidence and skills to undertake face-to-face clinical medication reviews. You'll learn about medicines that can cause falls in older people and will have the opportunity to discuss how you can prioritise patients for clinical medication review. You will also be able to practise and develop your practical skills by working with medical actors.

Regardless of your practice setting, being able to conduct person-centred, face-to-face clinical medication reviews is an essential skill that can help to reduce the likelihood of people experiencing harm from their medicines, and improve their health and wellbeing.

And of course attending this workshop will support your approach to revalidation.
